THE BANNER

Of Democracy Floats Proudly
Over the Grand Old City of Fort Wayne.

Always True, Always in Line,
This Year She Promises Results
Grandier than Ever.

The Ticket Ratified by the Grandest Demonstration in the History of the Summit City.

The Streets Thronged With People Whose Enthusiasm Knew no Bounds.

Ratification meetings are a part of campaign work. They are the beginning, the initiative steps, in the hard and laborious work which have characterized the many great political battles which have taken place in the history of the country. They are, it seems, looked upon as the necessary and proper method to start with in these struggles and consequently much depends upon their success in order to secure the intended result. Because of this fact great efforts are put forth to make these meetings a show and campaign workers throw skill and energy into them.

But, sometimes, with some tickets to ratify little enthusiasm can be evoked. The popular chord in every soul cannot be touched and the campaign with such inauspicious an opening drags heavily along, only to terminate in disastrous defeat. Democrats have experienced such occasions as well as republicans, and perhaps more frequently than they have this light fallen upon them, killing the political harvest and withering the grain.

Allen county can boast of as true democrats as have ever borne the name. They give of their means, of their time and of their energies to advance the interests of the party whose principles they believe to be right and under whose banner they have, some of the old veterans, marched for many years, through the heat and smoke of many battles, sometimes to victory, at other times to defeat, yet generous to the enemy or accepting the result with calmness and deliberation and at the same time ready and anxious to try again. They may be defeated, but they are not discouraged and so this year, when the great body of great men gathered at Chicago, representing the rank and file of the democratic party, there to choose as candidates for the presidency, men who should receive the support of those in whose stead they were acting, all eyes were turned upon them and the hope filled every heart that they should be guided right in their deliberations and that the best and strongest man might be chosen. Each man had his favorite and wished for his success. With his defeat came disappointment, but when the great convention went wild with enthusiasm over the nomination of Grover Cleveland, of New York, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, and when it was seen how not only the East, but the North, the West and the South, a grand and united democracy from the lakes to the gulf and from ocean to ocean, demanded their nomination, then the feeling of disappointment gave way to joy, to happiness, and to confidence. Every day since has strengthened these feelings, and this was the reason why a proposition for Fort Wayne and Allen county to met with such a glorious and hearty response. This accounts for a mass meeting, the largest, the grandest ever witnessed in this city on a similar occasion.

RATIFY THE NOMINATIONS

Yesterday afternoon threatened unpleasant weather, but this did not deter the completion of arrangements for the outpouring of the people in the evening and the clouds passed over leaving the evening all that could be desired. At an early hour the streets presented an animated appearance and as the hour approached for the beginning of the exercises the crowd very rapidly increased until it became converted into a great mass. The streets around the court house were next to impassable, while in the southern portion of the yard, in which the speakers' stand had been erected, every foot of available space was taken. The ladies were prominent in the audience and many of them cheered lustily and waved handkerchiefs and fans for the democratic nominees. The first gun of the campaign was fired from the court yard, the cannon of William Linderman doing service on this occasion as it has on so many others. This was the signal and in a short time drum corps and martial bands appeared upon the streets and awakened tender memories by the merry whistle of the fife and the soul-stirring beat of the drums. From the court house down there suddenly appeared a flash of light and a bright-winged star was sent flying through the skies finally breaking into many pieces, and revealing all the colors of the rainbow. Gaily colored lights flashed and burned, producing a brilliant effect, while the frequent booming of the cannon added a noisy and yet hearty cheer to the more quiet portion of the display. The crowd grew larger and larger until it seemed that there was no longer room for more. Several of the police were kept more than busy in keeping the streets clear to allow the passage of vehicles, while the crowd surged back and forward in the vain endeavor to comply with the requests. Viewed from an elevated position it was a striking scene. The vast number of men, women and children gathered around the yard, trying to force their way nearer the speaker's stand, standing so closely together that to move was almost impossible, their faces wearing the expression of happiness while their voices gave expression to their thoughts in hearty cheers for the favorites. There they stood, contentedly, patiently and anxiously, for at least two hours, during which time the exercises of the evening were in progress. The occasional flashing of a sky-rocket and the more steady glare of the greatest competitor the moon has ever known, the electric light, revealed this pleasant scene and made it assume more the appearance of a national holiday than a meeting of political significance. The small boy was on hand with his favorite instrument—a tin horn—upon which he blew discordant notes in praise of the gallant ticket. The youths were there, those just entering upon life, to whom a national campaign is a novelty, a new feature. The middle aged men were there, those who had passed through the greater part of life's voyage, and the old, gray-haired veterans were there, those who had helped kindle the fire of patriotism in days long past, who had lifted the banner of democracy on high and had marched with it through many campaigns, who have seen the proud moments of victory and the sad periods of defeat, now niding by their counsel and their advice in the continuation of the work, and all this crowd, little and big, young and old, uniting in three grand and hearty cheers for grand army which gathered to do honor to the ticket proclaimed the love in which it is held and promises grand results on the glorious November day when the work shall end in deeds.

Meanwhile several of the ward clubs, those whose organization has been completed, had marched in led by drum corps and martial bands, whose music created a perfect furor and started another outburst of enthusiasm which prevailed for some time. The boys looked handsome in their uniforms and were the recipients of many compliments. They increased the enthusiasm, if such was possible, and it was difficult to secure sufficient quiescence to permit the meeting to proceed. Then when quiet was restored careful attention was given to the different speakers, which was interrupted with frequent applaudings.

HON. MONTGOMERY HAMILTON, president of the Jeffersonian club, was chairman of the meeting and shortly after 8 o'clock stepped to the front of the platform and called the assembly to order. Mr. Hamilton paid a high tribute to the democratic standard bearers, Cleveland and Hendricks, closing his remarks by an eloquent oration on the progressive march and great principles of the democratic party. Mr. Hamilton then announced the first speaker of the evening.

HON. JOSEPH E. EDGERTON, Mr. Edgerton stepped forward and was greeted by cheers from the assembled multitude. He read from manuscript an exhaustive address, following from its infancy the democratic party in its great struggle for constitutional liberty and honest government. Mr. Edgerton favorably reviewed the work of the national democratic convention, ennobled its nominees and approved its platform in terms both eloquent and clinching. He spoke of the election of Tilden and Hendricks in 1876 and said he was glad now that almost the identical ticket was before the country for vindication which it would triumphantly get from the honest, intelligent people in November. Mr. Edgerton reviewed the opposition to Cleveland in the convention and after referring to the grand character and great ability of Hon. John Kelly, of New York, predicted that he and his association would give a hearty support to the democratic national ticket as it has done for nearly a century. Mr. Edgerton said he could most heartily approve the democratic ticket and it would receive from him throughout the campaign his heartiest support.

Chairman Hamilton stepped again to the rostrum and said a republican was present from New York who had never voted for a democrat or hoped for the success of the democratic party, but who now wanted to declare himself for Cleveland and Hendricks. Mr. Hamilton introduced

GOTTLOB WIEHER, PH. D., son of the venerable Dr. Sihler, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran church, and a professor in Dr. Sachs collegiate institute at Central Park, New York. Prof. Sihler said he was one of the New York independent republicans who were 100,000 strong, under the leadership of the New York Times, the New York Herald, the solid German press of the state, and such statesmen as George William Curtis and Carl Schurz. He thought it about time to rebel against a party heedless of the rights of the people, heedless of its purposes and principles. When a party loses its identity in its insatiable thirst for gain and selects a standard bearer insubstantial and grasping, it was time for thinking, honest men to revolt and he was one of them. Prof. Sihler said New York would roll up such a majority in November as would ring from democratic lips throughout the nation and bury the republican party in a grave dug by itself. Prof. Sihler was loudly cheered, and after it subsided

HON. ROBERT C. REIL, delegate-at-large from Indiana to the democratic national convention, addressed the audience and his silvery voice reached the ears of the assembled multitude for a square around. Mr. Bell said words could scarcely describe the grandeur of the last national democratic convention, and no assembly like it ever convened in the nation. The standard bearer selected by that great convention was not his choice, not that he was not worthy, great and capable, but because he preferred to see one of Indiana's statesmen honored and exalted as his great statesmanship deserved. Mr. Bell said no honest man, no democrat or thinking republican could refuse to support the national democratic ticket which was led by two statesmen as pure, able and fearless as the country has. Mr. Bell said he desired to give some of his time to a friend—a stranger in our midst and introduced a delegate to the national democratic convention from Alabama and the legal representative of Mr. John H. Bass in the south. Mr. Walden said Alabama was glad to greet Indiana on which with New York like hope of the south was centered. He referred to the hard progress of the southern states through carpet bag and negro rule, but that the sun of prosperity was shining and if New York and Indiana responded rightly the solid south would again greet them.

HON. JOSEPH A. WALDEN,

HON. FRANKLIN E. RANDALL,

a representative of the old and honored democracy, was introduced and said he wanted to again approve a democratic national nomination, to again assert his allegiance to the party in whose battles he has long been a willing fighter. Mr. Randall said so long ago he heard the republicans promise reform, and believed it is probable now as the story of the devil turning saint. Mr. Randall's face beamed with enthusiasm as he referred to the great work of the democratic party, and he was pleased to find it stronger than ever to-day with victory within its grasp.

HON. EDWARD O'BROURKE,

judge of the circuit court and a representative Irishman and Catholic, was introduced, and in clear and piercing words avowed a more earnest and determined support than ever to the grand old democratic party. He pictured the national convention, reviewed the progressive march of democracy, through a quarter of a century of defeat and adversity that the nation might not lose its grandeur or be wrecked by mercenary politicians. Mr. O'Bourke was satisfied that victory was on the democratic banner this year and believed every honest independent voter, every thinking Catholic and every true democrat should cling to the democratic banner, which was always broad enough and always high enough to wave over, shield and protect the American people of every race, color and creed.

There were other speakers on the program, but the time was so late they requested not to be called upon and, after three rousing cheers and the booming of the cannon, the grandest political demonstration in the history of Fort Wayne drew to a close.
